TIP OF THE MONTH

Josh Larys

HEAD GOLF PROFESSIONAL

Increasing width in the backswing helps create a larger swing arc, allowing the club to travel farther and generate more speed at impact. Width is the distance created between the hands and the body during the backswing. A wider backswing improves extension and sequencing, helping players stay connected while creating more power and consistency. We are not looking for the arms to fold excessively in the backswing. We actually want the exact opposite. The goal is to keep the arms extended and away from the body to create width and space. This gives the club more room to accelerate, producing greater club head speed, improved consistency, and increased distance.
